

Five for Friday- Flourish During a Zombie Apocalypse

If we piqued your interest in Shorting Zombie Stocks last week, we follow with a screen that seeks stocks that may do well if a recession occurs and a zombie apocalypse weighs on markets.

Last week's scan focused on stocks with meager interest coverage ratios and flat to negative earnings and sales growth. The result was stocks that may find it challenging to roll over maturing debt if bank lending standards tighten, as we suspect they will.

This week's report seeks zombie slayers. These are stocks that can weather a recession and tighter lending conditions well. In this scan, we use similar criteria but seek stocks at the opposite end of the spectrum regarding said criteria. For example, we searched for relatively high-interest coverage ratios, solid and consistent sales and earnings growth, and plenty of free cash flow.

The idea for the scan came from the Piper Sandler graphic below.
